Raisman: Proposed settlement
'offensive'

Scott Gleason USA TODAY

Three-time Olympic gold medalist Aly Raisman said USA Gymnastics is involved in a "cover-up" and blasted the organization's proposed settlement that absolves officials of liability for former doctor Larry Nassar's sexual abuse of numerous gymnasts.

"It's honestly offensive," Raisman told NBC's "Today" on Monday. "It's devastating. It's incredibly draining. USA Gymnastics, United States Olympic Committee — they refused to take any accountability to address the issue, to figure out what went wrong."

"I am heartbroken that this is still going on."

USA Gymnastics has proposed a $215 million settlement to compensate victims, with payments based on where the abuse happened. As part of the settlement, former USA Gymnastics CEO Steve Penny, former national team coordinators Martha and Béla Károlyi, and the U.S. Olympic and Paralympic Committee would be absolved from liability in the settlement.

"It shows they don't care," Raisman said. "They're just trying to push it under the rug and hoping people will forget about it when they watch the Olympics this summer."

The proposed settlement comes six months ahead of the Tokyo Olympic Games.

Raisman was sexually assaulted by Nassar, a former team doctor for USA Gymnastics who is now serving life in prison, and spoke passionately in a witness statement during his 2018 trial.

The 25-year-old said too much information is still being blanketed by USA Gymnastics.
